All you need is a keen eye for interesting details, a little bit of creativity, and some basic writing skills. Writer's block is caused by fear of what others will think of your work. When you're not confident in your own abilities, you're likely to worry about how good your writing actually is before it even gets published. This type of doubt can sap all the enjoyment out of writing, because instead of thinking about what you'd like to write next or how to improve the current piece that's on your desk, you're stuck mulling over irrelevant things that don't matter. If this describes your situation now, stop stressing and just relax. Try to let your creativity flow freely instead of worrying about your writing abilities. Instead of worrying about whether or not you're good enough, focus on getting the most out of what you're doing. Come up with a simple goal for each piece, such as:
